St. Charles Parish Launches Search for New Director Economic Development and Tourism

Parish seeks leader to drive business growth and investment

HAHNVILLE, LA—President Matthew Jewell has launched a search for a new Director of Economic Development and Tourism to lead business attraction, job creation, and economic expansion efforts in St. Charles Parish. Corey Faucheux, who has held the position for more than 31 years, is retiring this summer.

"Corey has been an integral part of St. Charles Parish's economic growth and success for over three decades. During his tenure, his commitment has strengthened our business community, fostered industry partnerships, and driven economic investment," stated President Jewell. "We are grateful for his unwavering dedication and the lasting impact he has made on our parish. On behalf of St. Charles Parish, I sincerely thank Corey for his 30 years of service and wish him all the best in his well-earned retirement."

"I am forever grateful for the opportunity to serve this wonderful Parish and work alongside the incredible people of this community. I am proud of the successes we've achieved together and the foundation we've built for lasting prosperity," stated Corey Faucheux, "Economic development is never just about numbers. It's about people, relationships, and the belief that a thriving economy benefits everyone. I extend my heartfelt thanks to every Parish President and Council Member who entrusted me with this responsibility and supported a shared vision for progress. Working with many dedicated parish co-workers, elected officials, business leaders, and residents has been an honor. My heart will always be with St. Charles Parish, its people, and its immensely bright future."

The new leader will oversee economic and tourism development efforts in St. Charles Parish, building on previous successes to attract and expand business opportunities. Working under the direction of the parish president, they will develop and implement strategies to continue the parish's position as a magnet for industry while promoting economic diversity, stability and community prosperity.

The search for a new Economic Development Director is underway. The TJC Group, a Baton Rouge-based consulting firm, is assisting in the process.
